Report

How does the song go?

"Climb every mountain, Ford every stream."

Well there were no streams to ford and, if there were any, there was no water in them anyway. But there were mountains aplenty! After a diversion up through the park in a south-westerly direction, straight toward Mt Cootha, the hares settled upon an easterly direction, and then northerly and then westerly and then back to the start. How very symmetrical. Now the pack, led of course by Tinker Bell and Even Optus, maintained a challenging pace and were not even discouraged by the heights of Birdwood Terrace. Then over the hill and down the other side to the valley near Government House. Where the walkers were all through this ordeal remains a mystery. Rumour has it that some of them at least were huddling (some say cuddling) in fear behind the bus depot. Anyway at some point in time everyone straggled back to the start in various stages of dishevelment.

Now it is a curious phenomenon, how a single beer erases the memory of all hashmen. Because after a sip or two of the amber liquid, the run was being praised in glowing terms without any regard to the hills, craggy ridges, valleys etc which had just been traversed.

The circle was as usual dominated by petty accusation and cross-accusation. Where are the good old days when charges of adultery with the wives of other hashmen, were regularly laid (with no foundation of course)? Anyway, for some reason which escapes the writer, Even Optus got the SOTW. Thanks to Irish and Pee Wee for the run and the well catered event after the celebrations.
